Albert Einstein knew the truth. "As far as the laws of mathematics refer to reality, they are not certain; and as far as they are certain, they do not refer to reality." However good we are at maths – or theoretical physics – our efforts to apply it to the real world are always going to mislead. So perhaps we shouldn't be surprised that reality is not what it seems – even when ...

Again, our physical material reality really ISN'T physical at all. The meaning, significance and implications of these findings within our quantum world have led to a plethora of ideas and theories, some of which lay inside the label of "pseudo-science." This article will present scientific evidence that clearly show the connections between consciousness and what [...]

Since the ancient Greek era, modern discoveries have shaped the concept of matter as it is known today. In 1643, Evangelista Torricelli showed that air had mass, which demonstrated that even in a substance people cannot see or touch, something physical was present. Daniel Bernoulli theorized that this was because the air had particles that behaved differently than the particles of a stone wall ...

In the most palpable way in our daily life, the nature of physical reality involves time. Yet the theorist Emily Adlam says that the temporal locality is a dogma that it is time to bring down. Although the principle of quantum entanglement, namely the principle of spatial non-locality, is accepted today, the question of temporal locality hasn't been much debated, that is to say that one agrees ...

Our mental thoughts that are an integral role in the shaping whatever physical matter we see before us. On a deeper level, what this means is that our inner world is creating our outer world, and that means that we can mindfully alter our reality. Our knowledge and perception of life is very relative to our own thoughts and experience, not to mention whatever we have been 'taught' and ...
