Daniel Klein wears his scholarship lightly and guides us affectionately through his Odyssey with the touch of a kindly old uncle. The book was easy to digest, sunny and positive (no mean feat when facing up to old age). So, all in all, young Klein, a thoroughly enjoyable good read of a book, and one I shall revisit again. Hey, and I'm not your ...

Old friends & new discoveries made the list. I decided, however, to concentrate on fiction & non-fiction only. In no particular order: I love historical fiction and it hardly ever comes better than Claire Robertson's The Spiral House (Umuzi, 2013). I heard Robertson speak at the FLF last year and was immediately intrigued. During the festival, the novel was shortlisted for the Sunday Times ...

-I've been lucky enough that some generous fans have sent me rare old copies of Meditations. They're falling apart, worn with age. It strikes me what a Stoic would have thought if given a book that was then a couple hundred years old. They'd think about the person who owned it and what became of them (dead), they'd think about all the things the person did other than study philosophy (mostly ...
